Bahmanis of Gulbarga

The Bahamani Sultanate (1347–1527 CE), one of the earliest Islamic kingdoms of the Deccan, issued distinctive silver Tankas that embody both political authority and cultural fusion. Struck on broad flans in good silver weight, these coins feature bold Arabic inscriptions with the Sultan's name, regnal titles, and religious invocations, often highlighted in elegant calligraphy. Unlike the earlier Delhi issues, Bahamani Tankas exhibit a unique Deccan character, making them highly recognizable and sought after. These coins are treasured as historic emblems of the Sultanate's prosperity, vibrant trade, and refined artistry.

We are delighted to present a representative collection of Bahamani silver Tankas, covering all known rulers and major types. Highlights include the exceedingly rare Tanka of Tahmatan Shah, along with extremely rare issues of Daud Shah and Mujahid Shah true trophies for the discerning numismatist.

This extremely rare and unusual issue was first published by Ken Wiggins in ONSNL no. 118, in 1989. However, he did not give any details as to what its provenance was and why was it significant, beyond the possibility that it may have been a pattern.

The British government, particularly after the transfer of India's governance from the East India Company in 1860, had been very keen on consolidating the British rupee as the only currency in all of India. It actively discouraged princely states from having their own coinage, which was considered 'inferior' and prone to be substandard as it was privately managed. The princes on the other hand, pushed such pressures back by actively considering using machines to produce coins, so that their currency was as good as British coins.

As the date VS 1930 suggests, Nawanagar appears to have tried issuing a silver coinage using machines in early 1870s. It certainly wasn't alone – its neighbours Kutch, Junagarh and Radhanpur had all experimented around the same time. Machine-struck Copper 3-Dokdo coins bearing VS 1928 are known and 1-Kori pieces bearing VS 1934 as well.

For some reasons, the experiment did not take off. Possible reasons include an active interference from the Govt of India in importing the machinery or inadequate supplies of silver to run the mint. Wiggins has remarked on its similarity in design with the 5-Kori coins of Kutch to hazard a guess that it was probably struck in the mint at Bhuj. However, there is no evidence to this suggestion. Whatever be the reason, the coins remain exceptionally rare– this is perhaps the third piece ever known.

During the Second Anglo-Maratha War the Maratha armies in north India were decisively defeated by the British under Lord Lake who captured the city of Delhi on 11 September 1803. On 30 December 1803 (AH1218/Ry.46), Daulat Rao Sindhia signed the Treaty of Surji-Anjangaon. Under its clauses, Hisar, Panipat, Rohtak, Rewari, Gurgaon, Ganges-Jumna Doab, the Delhi-Agra region, parts of Bundelkhand, Broach, some districts of Gujarat and the fort of Ahmadnagar were all ceded to the British.

Although technically, Delhi, called Shahjahanabad on the coins, was the nominal capital of the Mughal Empire, it was brought effectively under British suzerainty, as persuasively argued by Paul Stevens and Sanjay Garg, based on government documents preserved in both London and Delhi.

The present coin must have been struck immediately after Lord Lake's conquest of Delhi as it has a small lion, presumably standing for British authority, added to the normal mint marks of Delhi. This is an exceptional variety, as only two or three other coins with the additional lion are known and bear a very differently executed lion on them.

Collection of Shree Pranlal Gangji Shah

Shri Pranlal Gangji Shah, an eminent industrialist, philanthropist, and community leader, has dedicated his life to business excellence and social upliftment. As a senior partner of the Simplex Group of Companies, he has successfully led enterprises in agro-foods, beverages, and consultancy. Over the decades, he has held distinguished positions across trade, industry, and social organizations, including President of multiple Jain Sanghs, Lions Club, and business associations in Jabalpur, and has been recognized nationally with awards such as the Indira Gandhi Priyadarshani Award and the National Industrialist Excellence Award. As the first in his community to establish a Hindu Undivided Family (HUF) in the early 1970s, he has always been a pioneer in preserving traditions while embracing progress. Beyond business, he has been at the forefront of social welfare—organizing large-scale rehabilitation camps, supporting women’s empowerment through Lijjat Papad, and contributing to the upliftment of economically weaker and handicapped sections of society.

Alongside his professional and social commitments, Shri Shah has nurtured a lifelong passion for numismatics. He began collecting coins in 1970, inspired by his family legacy—his father, Shri Gangji Shah, had founded Merau Metal Works, which supplied metal for the historic Kutch mint coins. Over the past five decades, Shri Shah has built a remarkable and meticulously curated collection that reflects both historical significance and cultural heritage. Today, as he brings Part of his treasured collection to auction, it not only represents his personal journey but also offers future custodians a rare opportunity to own a part of history carefully preserved by a visionary industrialist and philanthropist.
