The ancient city-state of 'Nadinagara' has been identified with Nadner, a site located on the Narmada River. The palaeography of the characters in Brahmi on the coin is evidently early. It is plausible that these issues are perhaps some of the earliest inscribed indigenous coins in mainland India. Important Collection of Maharathis in Central Maharashtra and The Kshatrapa- Satavahana conflict in Maharashtra

The coinage of Maharathis in Central Maharashtra

A significant number of coins struck by Maharathis have been recently known from Central Maharashtra. The following lots offer a comprehensive selection of such coins. Issued by a group of rulers, who formed close kinship ties, as evident from the choice of motifs and symbols, these coins are most likely dated to the mid-first century AD, when the Satavahana Empire was at its lowest ebb. Some of them are counterstruck over other rulers in the same group thereby offering some clues about their internal chronology. It is likely that subordinate rulers like the Maharathis, Mahabhojas and Mahasenapatis took advantage of this weakening and struck their own coins during this period. The coins remain unpublished in numismatic literature, barring a small descriptive note, and are significant for our understanding of the nature and structure of Satavahana polity during the first century.

The Kshatrapa – Satavahana conflict in Maharashtra

Towards the middle of the 1st century AD, a major conflict erupted in the Deccan. Most likely prompted by political ambitions to control the lucrative Indo-Roman trade conducted through ports and trade routes of the Maharashtra coast and hinterland, Nahapana, the Kshaharata Kshatrapa of Western India, made inroads in a weakening Satavahana Empire. Although successful in the first push, Nahapana met his nemesis in Satavahana king Gotamiputa Satakani, who in words of his son, 'exterminated the Kshaharata race' and restored the Satavahana power to its former glory. The selection of coins offered here bear testimony to this important period in the ancient history of the Deccan.

Owing to the similarity between motifs, usually the tree device of Nahapana is found counterstruck on the elephant motif of the Satavahana coins. However, in this coin, this is not the case – here a Kshatrapa 'tree' device is counterstruck on a Satavahana 'tree' device. This makes the coin exceptionally rare.

- 453 Aurangzeb, Silver Rupee, 11.45g, Sondha Mint, AH 1111/ RY 44 (Unpublished). Extremely fine, exceedingly rare. Offered for the first time.

Sondha (alternatively known as Sodhe, Sonda, Sonde, Swadi, Sudhapur etc.) was a local kingdom ruled by a Virashaiva Nayaka family, which rose to prominence after the fall of the Vijayanagara Empire. During 17th century, the kingdom became closely associated with the Marathas but found itself squeezed between the prolonged war that ensued between Mughals and Marathas, waged by the emperor Aurangzeb after Chatrapati Shivaji's death in 1680. As a survival tactic, Sondha accepted nominal Mughal allegiance and as a result managed to extend its sway towards South Maharashtra, Goa and North Canara regions. At the same time, the kingdom continued to extend help to the Marathas against the Mughals. This was however, a fine balancing act.

In 1699-1700, when this coin was struck, the political relations between Mughals and local rulers of Karnataka, such as the Nayakas of Sondha and Bednur, were entering a new phase. The Mughal headquarters were based very close to the Sondha territory and the ensuing war pressurized the ruler, Basawappa Nayaka to declare his allegiance to the Mughals afresh. It is very likely that the coin was struck during this period much like other local rulers like the Sawants of Wadi struck coins in Aurangzeb's name. The discovery of the rupee of Sondha adds yet another new name to the Mughal mint repertoire.

Pindari

- 613 Central and Peninsular India, so-called "Pindari" style, Kachcha Paisa (3), 14.39, 14.75g, 14.70g, with small countermarks on very worn Bahamani under types, Two coins bear two countermarks – Amir Shah and Sultan Mahmud (crudely written) and one bears only Sultan Mahmud. Very fine, rare. 3 coins.

These coins are sometimes attributed to the Barid Shahi sultans of Bidar. However, there was no 'Sultan Mahmud' in the Barid Shahi dynasty and as it is clearly evident from one of these coins, the countermark 'Amir Shah' has been struck over 'Sultan Mahmud'. This suggests that either both countermarks were applied around the same time, or 'Amir Shah' came after 'Sultan Mahmud'. Both these propositions suggest that the attribution to Barid Shahi sultans is highly problematic.
